Dear Mr Baron,

Remembering your long-standing campaign against the obnoxious 'Searchlight' gang, I am wondering whether you saw its August 2008 issue with its Gable article on 'terrorism' by Britons in Britain which included eight untrue and defamatory allegations against me under this heading. If you did not see it, I can let you have a photocopy on request.

I have engaged solicitors to write to Gable and also the magazine calling for an out-of-court settlement whereby they publish a retraction and pay my costs to date and discuss compensation. This they will be doing during the next few days. We will then await their response within seven days.

They may fall in line but are more likely to refuse to budge. if the latter, it is unlikely that I will go further as it could be a gamble with massively costly expenses if I failed or was awarded much inferior damages.

In any events I am not precluded from attempting a criminal libel action whether I seek to invoke the police in the first instance, or, failing their action, bring a case myself.

Yours sincerely,

Colin Jordan
